L200 is being developed as an urban living lab including digital tools that allow a diverse group of organizations and individuals to share the space over time and to co-create its hybrid, digital and physical identity.

...a hybrid urban node run collectively at the crossings of manifold urban networks of paths and spaces for public life, of communication and information, of trade, exchange and networking...

The right to the hybrid city: central urban space as a commons

...a boundary object between academics from different disciplines, researchers and activists, non-profit organizations and local shops, initiatives on different areas of local action, the market and the civil society, the neighborhood and global sustainability movement...

Hybrid infrastructure for the future: a replicable prototype

...an open flexible space for co-working, temporary shops, meetings, parties, participatory workshops, exhibitions, performances, film screenings...
